The Public Health Advisory Committee (PHAC) is an independent expert advisory committee established under the Pae Ora (Healthy Futures) Act 2022.

Twenty-five years after the last major report on the determinants of health in Aotearoa, the latest report examines trends since 2000 in the distribution of the determinants of health (such as income, housing, cultural identity and social cohesion) and in health outcomes, and why these are unevenly distributed in our society. It looks forward to 2040, and assesses new challenges to health equity and wellbeing, including the impacts of commercial interests and of the 'megatrends' – the climate crisis, AI and technology. It proposes actions for government across three broad areas.
